At age 55, Marion Baker still remembers one particular Thanksgiving dinner at her uncle's house when she was only 10. It was the year the turkey took an unexpected detour to the table.

It happened when her uncle, after having had too much to drink, began telling dirty jokes in front of the children. One of his brothers-in-law made the mistake of trying to admonish him.

That's when the all-out argument broke out and the turkey took flight.

"My uncle took it out of the oven and threw it across the room," recalls the Freehold, N.J., resident. "It went into a gazillion pieces. It was done, and it went all over the kitchen cabinets, the china closet and the dining room."

The result? "We had to have bologna sandwiches for dinner."

Yes, the holidays not only can bring out the best, but the worst in people.

In fact, if you don't have a holiday argument story to tell, you're probably one of the few. And it seems
